No, you were not. I bring my dog where she is allowed. If someone says they don't want or like dogs, I have a choice: either I don't go or she doesn't go and she stays at home. Easy choice: she stays at home. As I said, she goes where she is welcome not where she isn't. Mine is a great dog, friendly, but not overly so, and extremely well behaved.

Even if domesticated cats know they don't need to catch their own food to survive, they cannot resist the urge and often enjoy the hunt and chase. Some cats that catch prey will bring their owners the dead animals—or, perhaps even more unpleasantly, sometimes ones that are still alive—to show off their prized catch for later consumption ...

Many people believe that if they are arrested and not "read their rights," they can escape punishment. Not true. But if the police fail to read a suspect his or her Miranda rights, the prosecutor can't use for most purposes anything the suspect says as evidence against the suspect at trial. Of course, as with nearly all legal rules, there are exceptions (as where public safety is at issue).
